

WRITING LITERARY ARGUMENTS

Most of the research writing about literature you encounter in school is persuasive in genre and purpose. Sometimes, that research can help determine the focus of your writing. Other times, it will give you evidence of the various ways of reading literature that you can use to make your argument about a text more convincing. Other times, you will use the research to help you make a persuasive case about a literary topic that you want to discuss. In this section, we will be discussing how to write and plan your literary argument.

When you write a literary argument, you follow the same process you do when you write an argument about a literary topic. However, because the purpose of an argument is to convince readers, you will focus more on addressing opposition to your own view.

Planning a Literary Argument

Choosing a Debatable Topic

Arguments are persuasive only when people disagree, especially a particular issue that is not resolved. Thus, first you will be looking for a topic about which you will write. Once you have an argumentative issue, you will be looking for a literary text that you can use to discuss that issue. A good literary debatable topic can draw about ten or twelve people into a debate. The next step is to find evidence about that literary text that supports the two opposing positions. Remember, you are trying to persuade.

- Topic Statement: Is the character of Hamlet a tragic hero?
- Debatable Topic: Is Hamlet a tragic hero?
- Debatable Topic: Is Hamlet a tragic hero?

As you choose a literary debatable topic, you should also think about the evidence you will use to support your own position. What will your argumentation be about?
