Background The presence of COVID-19 in low- and middle-income countries (LMICs) is raising important concerns about effective pandemic response and preparedness in the context of fragile health systems and the pervasiveness of misinformation. The objective of this study was to gain an understanding of how COVID-19 was perceived by households experiencing extreme poverty in the Philippines.

Methods This study was conducted in partnership with International Care Ministries (ICM), a Philippine-based non-governmental organization (NGO) that runs a poverty-alleviation program called Transform targeted towards extreme low-income households. We integrated knowledge, attitudes, and practices (KAP) questions into ICM's cross-sectional program monitoring and evaluation systems from February 20 through March 13, 2020. Frequencies and proportions were calculated to describe the respondents' responses, and the Kruskal-Wallis test and binomial logistic regression were undertaken to determine the socio-demographic characteristics associated with COVID-19 KAPs.

Results In total, 2224 respondents from 166 communities in rural, urban and coastal settings were surveyed. Although the survey was administered during the earlier stages of the pandemic, 94.0% of respondents had already heard of COVID-19. Traditional media sources such as television (85.5%) and radio (56.1%) were reported as the main sources of information about the virus. Coughing and sneezing were identified as a transmission route by 89.5% of respondents, while indirect hand contact was the least commonly identified transmission route, recognized by 72.6% of respondents. Handwashing was identified by 82.2% of respondents as a preventive measure against the virus, but social distancing and avoiding crowds were only identified by 32.4% and 40.6%, respectively. Handwashing was the most common preventive practice in response to COVID-19, adopted by 89.9% of respondents. A greater number of preventive measures were taken by those with more knowledge of potential transmission routes.

Conclusions There is a need for targeted health education as a response strategy to COVID-19 in low-income settings, and it is important that strategies are contextually relevant. Understanding KAPs among populations experiencing extreme poverty will be important as tailored guidance for public health response and communication strategies are developed for LMICs.

Change in Epidemiology and Etiology of Respiratory Tract and Gastrointestinal Infections during COVID-19 Pandemic Philippe Gautret,Philippe Colson,Jaffar Al-Tawfiq,2024-08-28

The COVID 19 pandemic has had a significant impact on the epidemiology and etiology of respiratory tract and gastrointestinal infections The implementation of control measures such as social distancing and hand hygiene was associated with a decrease in the incidence of some respiratory and gastrointestinal infections caused by other viruses and bacteria Epidemiological data suggest that the incidence of respiratory tract infections other than SARS CoV 2 infection has decreased during the COVID 19 pandemic possibly due to the adoption of several non pharmaceutical interventions in public areas Currently there is very little research on the interaction between SARS CoV 2 and other infectious pathogens in terms of microbiome and virome As a matter of fact changes in the epidemiology of respiratory and gastrointestinal infections may be due to other causes than SARS CoV 2 specific control measures It is still unclear whether these changes might result from direct interaction between SARS CoV 2 and the microbiome and or virome Continuous and ongoing efforts to understand the impact of the COVID 19 pandemic on infectious diseases are critical in advancing scientific discovery for prevention and treatment strategies for future pandemics Through this research theme we aim to explore scientific gaps related to our understanding of the changes in epidemiology and pathogenic agents responsible for respiratory tract and gastrointestinal infections during the COVID 19 pandemic
