The main idea of a text is the central point or message that the author wants to convey. It is often found in the topic sentence, which is usually the first sentence of a paragraph. To identify the main idea, you should look for the most important information and ignore the supporting details. For example, in the text "The benefits of exercise", the main idea is that regular physical activity is good for your health. The supporting details include that it can help you lose weight, improve your mood, and increase your energy levels.

2. Identifying the supporting details

Supporting details are the facts, examples, and explanations that provide evidence for the main idea. They are usually found in the body paragraphs of a text. To identify supporting details, you should look for specific information that directly relates to the main idea. For example, in the text "The benefits of exercise", the supporting details are the specific benefits of exercise, such as weight loss, improved mood, and increased energy.
