

Structural steelwork

Design and construction

DIN
18 800
Part 1

Stahlbauten; Bemessung und Konstruktion

Supersedes March 1981 edition.

In keeping with current practice in standards published by the International Organization for Standardization (ISO), a comma has been used throughout as the decimal marker.

In this standard, the term 'load' is used for forces acting on a system from outside; this applies equally to compound terms that include the component 'load' (see DIN 1080 Part 1).

1 Introduction

Pending publication of a European Standard on the design and construction of steel structures, the March 1981 edition of this standard will also remain applicable alongside the present updated version.

This standard has been prepared jointly by Section 08 of the Normenausschuß Bauwesen (Building and Civil Engineering Standards Committee) and the Deutscher Ausschuß für Stahlbau (German Committee for Structural Steelwork).

The updated DIN 18 800 series of standards sets out practical rules for the engineer, based on the philosophy of design and safety formulated in Grundlagen zur Festlegung von Sicherheitsanforderungen an bauliche Anlagen (Principles for the specification of requirements relating to the safety of structures), issued by the Normenausschuß Bauwesen in 1981, and also takes into account the ongoing efforts to prepare harmonized specifications at the European level (Eurocodes). The references to DIN 18 800 Parts 2 and 3 relate to the November 1990 editions.
