Well, here it is!

The first issue of Write Hear, an eZine concerned with the music of the 1960s and 1970s. Though rooted in the original psychedelic era, it is not restricted to it. From twangy post-Beatles guitar instrumentalists to proto-punk and punk shag glass, from Mod to Mod and east coast west stylistic collisions, Write Hear wants to cover them. The name is inspired by the eZine's agenda of encouraging people to write (as in 'write here') and also points to what the eZine is for (writing about music) without tying it to a narrow focus, which gives us a lot more scope to expand and explore. It further connotes a sense of immediacy and urgency ('Right Here!'). Neither a commercial entity nor an academic journal, Write Hear is not constrained by target demographics, revenue streams and stylistic form. Nor is it a restricted club. A central tenet of the eZine is its open access and encouragement to participate in its writing by its readership. Contributors are encouraged to use their own writing voice. This is so that the author is comfortable in their writing and the excitement, humour etc. are conveyed with the vividness of their remembrance and experience and are unhindered by what is deemed a 'correct' way to write. I think this is all well conveyed by the contributors to this first issue and I hope you, as readers, might engage with their offerings and perhaps even feel motivated or pluck up the courage to write something yourself.

People who may normally not write much beyond an tweet or a text are especially encouraged to have a think and get in contact if you have an idea for writing something, especially if it is drawn from your own experience and / or knowledge. Or maybe have a go at writing a review of a new release you really like or an appraisal of a favourite album etc. Having worked in adult education for many years (and been an adult student myself), I know how hard it can be to take that first step, but also how rewarding it can be, so don't be shy! Write Hear is intended to turn readers into writers. So it is truly an exercise in collective ownership of what goes in it if you are generating the content. Readers as active contributors not just passive consumers, means what you have to say and about matters. Suggestions for potential contributions are though, encouraged from all quarters. Now dig in and enjoy!
