For questions 1-5, read the passage carefully select the most appropriate answer:

And finally, Pierre and Marie lured out the secret — two secrets. For instead of one, they found two new elements — a substance which they named polonium after Marie's native country, and another substance which they called radium.

The nature of polonium was amazing enough. Its radioactivity was ever so much more powerful that than of uranium. But the nature of radium was the eighth great wonder of the world. Its power of radiation was found to exceed that of uranium by one and a half million per cent.

It was customary for the recipients of the Nobel Prize to call for it in person at Stockholm. But the Curies were unable to make the journey. They were too ill. Quietly, modestly, humbly, they went on with their work — with their privations. They spent all the money on their further experiments and remained gloriously forgetful of their personal interests. When the therapeutic value of radium was established — it had been found effective, among other things, in the treatment of cancer, their friends urged upon them the necessity of patenting the process of extracting radium. To do so would have meant considerable wealth to the Curies, since radium was valued at $150,000 a gram. But they refused to derive any income from their discovery. "Radium is an instrument of mercy and it belongs to the world," they said.

They refused not only profits but honours as well. All they asked of the world was to give them a good workroom for their experiments. When the Dean of the Sorbonne wrote to Pierre that the minister had proposed his name for the Legion of Honour, Pierre — seconded by Marie — replied as follows: "Please be so kind enough to thank the Minister and to inform him that I do not feel the slightest need of being decorated, but that I am in the greatest need of a laboratory."

1. It can be inferred from the passage that

A. Scientists need honours to discover new things
B. Scientists don't bother about honours
C. Scientists need encouragement and infrastructure
D. Scientists tend to suffer in life
E. None of the other given options

Answer: Option C

2. As used in the 3rd paragraph of the passage, what is the meaning of "privation"?

A. Something personal
B. To keep to oneself
C. To feel sorry about oneself
