

Water Treatment Technology: Part 2

Water Treatment

Water treatment plants use a variety of processes to clean water. Some of the most common processes used are:

- 1. Coagulation and Flocculation: This process involves adding chemicals to the water to cause small particles to clump together into larger flocs. These flocs are then removed from the water by sedimentation or filtration.
- 2. Sedimentation: This process allows the heavy flocs to settle to the bottom of a tank, where they can be removed.
- 3. Filtration: This process involves passing the water through a filter to remove any remaining particles.
- 4. Disinfection: This process involves adding a disinfectant to the water to kill any remaining bacteria and viruses.
