

Research Proposal on Social Entrepreneurship

Title

Social Entrepreneurship - Best practices and the role of technology

Introduction

This research proposal suggests an exploratory approach to collect the best practices of successful social entrepreneurial ventures. It tries to establish a reliable and easily accessible platform on which academicians and prospective social entrepreneurs can build on. It is intended that full life-cycle stages of entrepreneurship would be taken into consideration wherever possible. In addition, how social entrepreneurs are making the best use of technology will be investigated and documented.

Background and Rationale

Although the term 'Social Entrepreneurship' is relatively new, evidence shows that some great social entrepreneurs have always existed in the last two centuries. Altruism coupled with business sense has paved way for new opportunities for those who have entrepreneurial skills and want to work for the betterment of the society. Extraordinary people like Muhammad Yunus (Nobel Peace prize winner in 2006) came up with brilliant ideas and succeeded at creating revolutionary products and services dramatically improving human lives (Yousry 2007). As opposed to traditional non-profits, which are dependant on charitable donations and government subsidies, social enterprises are increasingly self-sufficient and sustainable (Boschee & McClurg 2003).

There are a number of definitions for Social Entrepreneurship at the moment giving broad and narrow meanings to it. Whatever they are, the underlying truth is that making a social impact is as important for social entrepreneurs as creating personal and shareholder value, if not more (Austin, Stevenson and Wei Skillern 2006). Social Entrepreneurship is definitely more than the business or economic entrepreneurship.

Unlike some commercial/economic organisations that only voice their social concerns through their Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) departments, social enterprises treat their social and/or environmental responsibilities as the prime business cases. The CSR initiatives can change with time and circumstances, and range from simply organising donations by the employees to international social/voluntary projects involving millions of pounds, depending on the interests and financial status of the company. On the contrary, most social entrepreneurs get influenced by local problems with which they have first-hand experiences and decide to stick to them for a considerable time. They focus all of their resources and energies thinking about and analysing the social issues and offer direct and often speedy solutions to the people in need. Due to the stronger, quicker and more transparent impact the social
