

boards in air (Figure 1.5b). Air that makes contact with the components experiences an increase in temperature and hence a reduction in density. Since it is now lighter than the surrounding air, buoyancy forces induce a vertical motion for which warm air ascending from the boards is replaced by an inflow of cooler ambient air.

While we have presumed pure forced convection in Figure 1.5a and pure natural convection in Figure 1.5b, conditions corresponding to mixed (combined) forced and natural convection may exist. For example, if velocities associated with the flow of Figure 1.5a are small and/or buoyancy forces are large, a secondary flow that is comparable to the imposed forced flow could be induced. In this case, the buoyancy-induced flow would be normal to the forced flow and could have a significant effect on convection heat transfer from the components. In Figure 1.5b, mixed convection would result if a fan were used to force air upward between the circuit boards, thereby assisting the buoyancy flow, or downward, thereby opposing the buoyancy flow.

We have described the convection heat transfer mode as energy transfer occurring within a fluid due to the combined effects of conduction and bulk fluid motion. Typically, the energy that is being transferred is the sensible, or internal thermal, energy of the fluid. However, for some convection processes, there is, in addition, latent heat exchange. This latent heat exchange is generally associated with a phase change between the liquid and vapor states of the fluid. Two special cases of interest in this text are boiling and condensation. For example, convection heat transfer results from fluid motion induced by vapor bubbles generated at the bottom of a pan of boiling water (Figure 1.5c) or by the condensation of water vapor on the outer surface of a cold water pipe (Figure 1.5d).
