Pigments & Dyes

Lipstick colour originates from a range of different pigments and dyes. Carmine red is a commonly used pigment derived from scale insects. Eosin, also known as D&C Red No. 22, is a dye which reacts with the amino groups in the proteins of the skin to produce a deep red colour. Titanium dioxide can be used to dilute colours and give pink shades.

Other Compounds

A number of other compounds are also added to lipstick; this can include different fragrances, to mask the smell of the other chemicals present. Also, capsaicin, the compound found in chili peppers, is sometimes included, as its skin irritant effect can induce plumping of the lips in small quantities.
