Evaluating the Effectiveness of Terrorism Risk Financing Solutions Howard Kunreuther,Erwann Michel-Kerjan,2007 The 9 11 attacks in the United States as well as other attacks in different parts of the world raise important questions related to the economic impact of terrorism What are the most effective ways for a country to recover from these economic losses Who should pay for the costs of future large scale attacks To address these two questions we propose five principles to evaluate alternative programs We first discuss how a federal insurance program with mandatory coverage and a laissez faire free market approach for providing private insurance will fare relative to these principles We conclude that neither solution is likely to be feasible here in the United States given the millions of firms at risk and the current structure of insurance regulation We then evaluate how well the U S Terrorism

Risk Insurance Act TRIA a public private program to cover commercial enterprises against foreign terrorism on U S soil meets the five principles In particular we show that TRIA has had a positive effect on availability of terrorism coverage and also has significantly contributed to reducing insurance premiums TRIA is scheduled to terminate at the end of the year but pending legislation would extend the program for fifteen years after December 31 HR 2761 In this paper we show that such a long term extension might have important impacts on the market This could increase the take up rate as prices might be even lower than they are today We show also however that if TRIA were extended for a long period of time in its current form some insurers could game the program by collecting ex ante a large amount of premiums for terrorism insurance while being financially responsible for only a small portion of the claims ex post The general taxpayer and the general commercial policyholder whether or not covered against terrorism would absorb the residual insured losses This raises major equity issues inherent in the design of the program Centennial ,1997 Compensating Catastrophe Victims Véronique Bruggeman,2010-01-01 This book shows that amelioration of the current compensation solutions for disaster victims is indeed a possibility In a heated yet often poorly informed debate it offers clarity and insights regarding the financial compensation for victims of catastrophes which in addition to raising academic interest are certain to help build a framework for future policymakers and lawmakers faced with shaping compensation programmes for catastrophe victims Directory of Buyers of Insurance, Benefit Plans & Risk Management Services ,1996 Research Handbook on Climate Change Adaptation Law Verschuuren, Jonathan,2022-06-14 This thoroughly revised Research Handbook on Climate Change Adaptation Law brings together leading scholars in the field to summarise and assess key topics including tort and insurance law disaster law water law and marine law as well as biodiversity law and pollution control America's Corporate Finance Directory ,2007 Risk Management ,1986 The Investment Management Institute ,2007 EM ,1998 The Bulletin - New York State Insurance Department New York (State). Insurance Department,1998-10 Business Insurance ,1994 Fundamentals of Risk and Insurance Emmett J. Vaughan,Therese M.
