

Chapter 9 Biochemistry - Cellular Respiration

Microorganisms generate energy through aerobic and anaerobic respiration and photosynthesis, using several different pathways. Microorganisms use different pathways to generate energy depending on the availability of oxygen. Here is a simplified overview diagram:

1. Photosynthesis: Energy produced from photosynthesis is used for cellular respiration. This process involves the conversion of glucose and oxygen into carbon dioxide and water, releasing energy in the form of ATP and NADPH.
2. Respiratory pathways: Microorganisms use different pathways to generate energy depending on the availability of oxygen. Aerobic respiration uses oxygen as the final electron acceptor, while anaerobic respiration uses other molecules like nitrate or sulfate. Fermentation is a type of anaerobic respiration that produces energy without using an external electron acceptor.
3. Energy production: The energy produced from cellular respiration is used for various cellular processes, such as growth, reproduction, and movement. The energy is stored in the form of ATP and NADPH, which are used by the cell to power these processes.
4. Microbial metabolism: Microorganisms use different metabolic pathways to generate energy. Some microorganisms are autotrophic, meaning they can produce their own food through photosynthesis or chemosynthesis. Other microorganisms are heterotrophic, meaning they must consume organic matter to obtain energy.
5. Energy storage: Microorganisms store energy in the form of glycogen or polyphosphate. These energy stores can be used by the cell when it needs to generate energy quickly, such as during periods of stress or when resources are scarce.
