The DREAMer Incarceration Rate

By Miguel Angel Llamas and Scott L. Tompkins

President Trump is considering a revamp of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program. DACA gives temporary work authorization to foreign-born juveniles who were brought to the United States as children. In late 2017, DACA and other major legal immigration routes (DACA, Temporary Protected Status, and the program known as Deferred Action for Youth Arrival) accounted for 10 percent of the U.S. population aged 18 and under. In the past, DACA recipients are called “DACA-eligible” or “born here” (not the same thing as “born in the United States”). DACA has a popular press following that suggests it helped these legal immigrants who came through the United States as young age.<sup>1</sup> Facts of each year DACA-eligible immigrant status is included in the public perception that DACA-ers are disproportionately incarcerated relative to their country of origin.<sup>2</sup> However, research indicates that U.S. and non-DACA-eligible youth incarceration rates that were both similar to the non-age-immigrants.<sup>3</sup>

Service (ICE).<sup>4</sup> The reported rate of the population population who could apply for DACA, which first opened in 2010, according to the Pew Research Center, is about 1.5 million, according to the Migration Policy Institute.<sup>5</sup>

There is a great body of empirical evidence showing that legal and illegal immigrants do not differ in their rates of incarceration, and are less likely to be incarcerated than are nonimmigrant individuals.<sup>6</sup> There are two broad reasons for this: one is that not all non-immigrants have criminal records, and the other is that some criminal records are not reported to the courts.<sup>7</sup> There has also been that research on DACA-eligible immigrants and

METHODS

The researchers’ research used several approaches to identify factors that led to increases in the proportion incarcerated among the DACA-eligible age group. Data on legal status and other major immigration programs for their parents and themselves were obtained from the 2008 Census. Individuals are not over their legal immigration.<sup>8</sup> Data on legal immigration, naturalized citizens, and other major immigration programs were obtained from the 2008 Census. The first two variables, including what percentage of the U.S. population is being or would have been being incarcerated, are all available from the 2008 Census. The other two variables, including what percentage of the U.S. population is being or would have been being incarcerated, are all available from the 2008 Census. The other two variables, including what percentage of the U.S. population is being or would have been being incarcerated, are all available from the 2008 Census.
