PROJECT OVERVIEW

GETideas.org is a global online community for education system leaders. It provides constructive peer-to-peer dialogue and enables leaders to find information on ways to improve Global Education Transformation. As a result of globalization, accelerating technological change, and massive demographic shifts, education is experiencing long-term and irreversible pressures that are radically changing the level and nature of demand for learning. Education leaders have tremendous responsibility yet can find themselves isolated in their roles; as one of our Distinguished Education Leaders, Suzanne Freeman, noted, "especially isolated around innovation." Through the power of online collaboration among peers, GETideas.org advances a systematic approach to 21st-century innovations in education. Supported by Cisco, the community was developed and continues to provide current information to help education leaders discover a wide range of resources and research provided by members, businesses, and institutions in both the public and private arenas. For education leaders, GETideas.org provides an avenue for insight and inspiration, fosters a sense of urgency and capacity around innovation, and teaches them new ways to connect and engage online directly with thought leaders, visionaries, and peers. GETideas members may post expanded profiles and case studies, read and comment on blogs, attend live office hours events and videocasts, and participate in online discussions and virtual roundtables. All users can stay current on education news from around the world and browse the library section for white papers, points of view, resource guides, and research on the latest thinking on teaching and learning. With more than 1900 members from 95 countries and visitors from 150 countries, GETideas.org is an open community providing global education leaders an online experience to promote professional collaboration for education innovation and transformation. GETideas.org uses open source technology with specific design points to promote ease of use and access while reinforcing an experience that is rich in content, professionally meaningful and highly relevant to the targeted education leader community.
