Abstract:

This study investigated the language of political discourse in the Philippines through a Natural Language Processing (NLP) analysis of stylistic features and audience perception. A corpus of political speeches was analyzed using NLP techniques such as sentiment analysis, vocabulary analysis, and figurative language analysis. The results showed that political speeches in the Philippines exhibit distinct stylistic features, such as the use of emotionally charged words and rhetorical devices. Additionally, audience perception of the speeches varied based on the sentiment analysis, with some speeches eliciting positive responses while others were perceived negatively.
