The Forest Ecosystem

This diorama is a good example of how organisms have adapted to life in the forest ecosystem.

The most obvious animal in the forest is the bear. The bear's adaptation is made by its teeth and claws. The bear's teeth and claws are used to tear apart its food. The bear's claws are used to dig for food and to climb trees. The bear's fur is thick and brown, which helps it to stay warm in the winter and to blend in with the forest floor.

The birds in the forest have adapted to life in the forest by their beaks and feet. The birds' beaks are used to catch and eat their food. The birds' feet are used to grip onto tree branches and to fly.

The plants in the forest have adapted to life in the forest by their leaves and roots. The plants' leaves are used to capture sunlight and to produce food. The plants' roots are used to anchor the plants in the ground and to absorb water and nutrients.

Animals need clean water. There are more than 50 percent water and need a steady source of it to grow and stay healthy. They "drink" in the water using their lungs. Many animals such as fish, turtles and snakes live in the water and need to stay there. Forest animals are colorful, colorful, and they are beautiful and interesting to look at. They are also strong and smart, and are the most effective land cover for maintenance of water quality.
