Introduction

According to the science and technology which deals with sound in any project building, it studies the phenomenon of sound reflection, absorption and refraction and using this knowledge in other context and the design of rooms with special acoustic characteristics such as concert halls and theatres.

For the acoustician, sound insulation provides the most useful criteria to be satisfied.

It is interesting to note that every lightweight system can then gain an edge by applying mass systems sound protection on the levels defined by concrete masonry. Sound insulation characteristics of masonry walls have been found to be greater in the low frequency in the regions not yet permitted the greater use of lightweight construction, which has often been to the detriment of sound insulation levels.

Each practical assessment of sound LA, insulation, reduction and absorption is stated in this Manual Section.

Summary – Sound Insulation Performance Classification
