Abstract

Cars of the future will be very different from the ones we have known. New technologies along with the growing interest of customers in new services have started altering business models that have existed for more than a century. The car of the future will be connected. Vehicles will communicate with each other and with the infrastructure. The connected car will play a major role in a dynamically growing ecosystem of connected devices and systems.

With view to seamless connectivity automakers will need to fundamentally rethink the role of IT and further technology capabilities they will need in the future. Information and Communication Technology has become a critical enabler. Connectivity and Big Data have come to the fore. Cyber security becomes a pre-requisite as no connected car can be hacked.
