

TT44 - Using a Calorimeter

1. The calorimeter chamber that holds the reaction is used to measure the energy content of foods. The air, which surrounds the food is located inside the reaction chamber of the calorimeter. When a reaction occurs in the reaction chamber, the products that react, the chamber and the surroundings are the system, whereas the calorimeter is the surroundings.
2. When heated food is added to the chamber, the reaction chamber must also be added to measure the temperature. Energy is lost to the surroundings.
3. When using the products of the reaction, the calorimeter is the reaction chamber, the products are the food measurement.
4. This is the calorimeter chamber, and you keep the heat of the liquid for better measurement.
5. When the reaction chamber is used, the calorimeter measures the heat.
6. Including the mass of heat as the reaction takes place inside the chamber, the liquid and calorimeter are used and the calorimeter measures the temperature.
7. Assuming that no heat escapes from the calorimeter, when a reaction occurs, the energy that is lost is equal to the energy gained by the surroundings. From this, you can determine the heat of the reaction.
8. Since the power obtained from the reaction is equal to the energy lost, the energy gained is equal to the energy lost. When a reaction occurs, the energy lost is equal to the energy gained.
