Chapter 1 – Cellular Reading Assignment

Read and review the assigned textbook questions – (italicized are pre-lab/quiz questions)

1. Explain the fundamental properties:
 - a. Prokaryotes:
 In general, differences in prokaryotes that involve differences in size of nucleus or chloroplasts or limited compartmentalization (prokaryotes) affect overall metabolism, without an elaborate compartmentalized and specialized membrane system. Some prokaryotes, such as cyanobacteria, have internal membrane systems. Other prokaryotes possess flagella, which are used for movement, and pili, which are used for communication.
 - b. Eukaryotic organisms:
 Eukaryotes compartmentalize activities along with organelles. For example, synthesis of proteins and membrane lipids occurs within the endoplasmic reticulum, and protein synthesis occurs in the cytoplasm. In the production of ATP, there is a group of membrane proteins that serve to create an organelle for compartmentalizing these molecules, such as ATP and various waste products.

2. Use the following terminology to summarize these cellular processes: cellular respiration and photosynthesis.

Cellular respiration: the breakdown of organic molecules, and subsequent synthesis of ATP, using electrons from food and oxidizing agents like oxygen.

3. Why is having "reserves" important to living organisms (potential energy)?

When an object is displaced, it gains potential energy. Similarly, the ability to store energy in chemical bonds from the sun, through photosynthesis, is the main energy required to take the chemical energy. As chemical bonds potential energy, either in terms from a food source, or from photosynthesis, stores energy in chemical bonds.
