

ASSESSING LANGUAGE PRODUCTION IN CHILDREN

EXPERIMENTAL PROCEDURES

By Jon F. Miller, Ph.D., Professor and Section Head, Communicative Disorders, Waisman Center on Mental Retardation and Human Development, University of Wisconsin-Madison. With chapters by Thomas M. Klee, M.A., and Rhea Paul, M.A., Department of Communicative Disorders, and Robin S. Chapman, Ph.D., Professor of Communicative Disorders, University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Here is the first comprehensive source of informal assessment procedures proved effective under clinical conditions. In this handy volume, a master clinician distills the findings of seven years of testing at the Waisman Center on Mental Retardation and Human Development, where theory and research have been applied to the practical problems of developmental assessment. In compiling this outstanding work, author Jon F. Miller has produced a masterful and important tool for every speech and language clinician who deals with developmentally disabled children functioning under the age of eight—an age group especially difficult to test by standardized methods.

Assessing Language Production in Children reflects the view that every child, however handicapped, can be tested successfully. The proviso is that the clinician must be knowledgeable and flexible enough to tailor assessment approaches to the needs of each individual case. For this reason, Miller and a roster of distinguished contributors—including Robin S. Chapman, Thomas M. Klee, and Rhea Paul—have detailed simple yet effective procedures and guidelines worth following. In addition, they explain the theoretical and practical assumptions behind those procedures, offering the why as well as the how, to help clinicians make informed choices among available alternatives.

Invaluable in the preparation of IEP's, this book is unexcelled as a reference for procedures, content selection, and interpreting criteria necessary for the informal evaluation of productive language behavior. It is an excellent textbook for advanced undergraduate and masters level courses in diagnostic procedures and language disorders, as well as in speech and hearing and special education programs and is a must for every speech-language clinician whose practice includes young children, and for practitioners in special education and educational psychology.
