July 20, 2011 · Donald J. Ford, Ph.D., C.P.T. · 5 min read

We have known since antiquity that the seat of learning is the human brain. But it has only been in the last decade that neuroscience researchers have been able to go inside the brain and observe how learning actually occurs at the molecular level. New technologies like diffusion imaging have opened up the brain's inner workings and allowed scientists to "see" what is going on inside the brain when people are engaged in learning. More sophisticated experiments with the brains of laboratory animals are stretching the bounds of our understanding further.

To comprehend the way learning occurs in the brain, here's a brief primer on its physiology. The brain acts as a dense network of fiber pathways consisting of approximately 100 billion (10^{10}) neurons. The brain consists of three principle parts – stem, cerebellum and cerebrum – as shown in Figure 1 below. Of the three, the cerebrum is most important in learning, since this is where higher-ordered functions like memory and reasoning occur. Each area of the cerebrum specializes in a function – sight, hearing, speech, touch, short-term memory, long-term memory, language and reasoning abilities are the most important for learning.

So how does learning happen? Through a network of neurons, sensory information is transmitted by synapses (see Figure 2) along the neural pathway and stored temporarily in short-term memory, a volatile region of the brain that acts like a receiving center for the flood of sensory information we encounter in our daily lives.

Reisner, T. Pradeep, 2014-09-24 The world's fresh water supplies are dwindling rapidly even wastewater is now considered an asset By 2025 most of the world's population will be facing serious water stresses and shortages Aquananotechnology Global Prospects breaks new ground with its informative and innovative introduction of the application of nanotechnology to the remediation of contaminated water for drinking and industrial use It provides a comprehensive overview from a global perspective of the latest research and developments in the use of nanotechnology for water purification and desalination methods. The book also covers approaches to remediation such as high surface area nanoscale media for adsorption of toxic species, UV treatment of pathogens and regeneration of saturated media with applications in municipal water supplies, produced water from fracking, ballast water and more. It also discusses membranes, desalination, sensing, engineered polymers, magnetic nanomaterials, electrospun nanofibers, photocatalysis, endocrine disruptors and Al13 clusters. It explores physics based phenomena such as subcritical water and cavitation induced sonoluminescence and fog harvesting. With contributions from experts in developed and developing countries including those with severe contamination such as China, India and Pakistan, the book's content spans a wide range of the subject areas that fall under the aquanotechnology banner, either squarely or tangentially. The book strongly emphasizes sorption media with broad application to a myriad of contaminants, both geogenic and anthropogenic, keeping in mind that it is not enough for water to be potable; it must also be palatable.

Teacher-Student Relationships Ernest J. Zarra III, 2013-04-08. Why are so many public school teachers, administrators and coaches choosing to become romantically and sexually involved with teenage students and players? Since 2000, numbers of intimate relationships between teachers and students have skyrocketed. Teacher arrests are at all time highs. Is there a correlation between these relationships and communication and social technologies? The book explores what is driving those in public and private education to have romantic and sexual relationships with their students and to jeopardize their careers, families, reputations and freedom. What roles do communication and social technologies play in feeding teacher student relationships? Who is protecting teenagers from predator teachers and predator coaches in our schools? Is there a new phenomenon in schools? The Predator Teenage Student. What practical strategies can be put in place to protect teenagers from sexual predators on our campuses? The appropriate educational use of communication technologies on high school campuses. This book is provocative and relevant for educators at all levels, public and private. It is also a must read for professors, teachers in training, athletic and academic coaches, school administrators and parents.
