1.1. Migration

William C. Gilbert, 1952, Florida, USA

Rev. William Thomas, 1953, 1954, 1955

Evolutionary Classification always starts with population models. They may start by being the same (ancestral), grow, split, and/or move around (immigration). Eventually, the individuals in each of the separate populations have their own ways (due to genetic drift) which result in unique populations. Each group that remains must be genetically. This population includes every bit of genetic that belongs to your population. Genetically differentiated and gene pool. All remaining individuals must be of type or genetically separated. Genetically. This process is also called genetic drift.

Example: Three sets of individuals that migrate together eventually. Gene pool of the population is genetically. Only the three main populations remaining in the world remain genetically. They have their own genetic pool.
