

APUSH Ch. 14 Questions

US History

- 1) The Industrial Revolution not only further fueled the American economy, but changed the lives of women who up until that point had very limited opportunities in the working world. This in turn impacted family life as I will explain. When the - Industrial Revolution was in full swing, women were working in factories and mills. This was a new experience for many women, especially those from the South who were used to more traditional roles in the home. The Industrial Revolution also led to the rise of the middle class, which was a new social group. This new class was made up of people who were working in factories and mills, and they were earning more money than ever before. This led to a change in family life, as women were now able to support their families. This was a significant change, as women had previously been seen as dependent on men. The Industrial Revolution also led to the rise of the working class, which was a new social group. This new class was made up of people who were working in factories and mills, and they were earning less money than ever before. This led to a change in family life, as women were now able to support their families. This was a significant change, as women had previously been seen as dependent on men.

- 3) In terms of manufacturing, the most important innovation was the production of steel. Although not a direct result of the Industrial Revolution, the production of steel was a key factor in the growth of the Industrial Revolution. Steel was used in a wide range of applications, from bridges and buildings to machinery and tools. The production of steel was a major achievement, as it allowed for the construction of large-scale infrastructure. This was a significant change, as it allowed for the growth of the Industrial Revolution.
