(MITCHELL HOBBS AND ALANA MANN)

Mr X thought 'coal is amazing'

Mr X was an active member of his community. He had realised many years ago that being a valued member of a community was the secret to a happy life. As such, during the summer Mr X would volunteer to run the canteen at his local cricket club; while in the winter he performed a similar service for his daughter's netball team. His community service extended beyond sporting clubs; Mr X also volunteered as a weekend tour guide at a local museum, and he occasionally assisted with the bookkeeping at his local Surf Life Saving Club. But recently, Mr X had begun to notice an interesting connection between many of the clubs, sports teams, and community facilities present in his city; all seemed to have a connection with one of the three major mining companies that operated in the region. The local sport fields all seemed to be sponsored by mining corporations, as they had large signs acknowledging financial support: 'The Number 1 Sports Field is Proudly Sponsored by Big Coal, "We're Here to Stay"'. He also noticed that the National Rugby League team and the A-League Football team had Big Coal as their major financial sponsors. Even the Surf Life Saving carnival was sponsored by the multinational mining company, Fossil Fuels Unlimited.

Reflecting on the generosity by the major mining companies, Mr X was initially rather impressed by their commitment to the community. After all, many of these companies were now multinational corporations headquartered in the United States, and seemed rather removed from his city and his daughter's netball team, which had recently had their new clubhouse painted thanks to a small community grant from one such company. But gradually, Mr X began to wonder why these companies provided such funds to the community—what was in it for them? And the more he thought about this question the more he began to notice other public relations activities that were clearly funded by the mining industry. Billboards at the airport showed happy youthful miners and engineers looking into the sunset or playing on the beach, under the heading: 'Our Story is Your Story'; conspicuously absent from these billboards was any sign of the gaping hole in the landscape made by an open-cut mine. Mr X had also noticed advertisements on TV and YouTube that celebrated the energy properties of coal, with one advertisement proclaiming: 'Coal isn't it amazing'. Again, Mr X thought to himself, why spend such large sums on advertisements and community organisations? Was this about image management and promotion, or merely a generous industry sharing some of its profits? Could it perhaps be connected to the battle for public opinion on the issue of fossil fuels and their connection to anthropogenic climate change? Mr X was starting to question whether the goodwill he felt towards the mining industry might have been engineered by the industry, so that he would vote against politicians calling for new environment reforms. As such, he decided to do a little research into public relations strategies and tactics in order to better understand whether someone was trying to influence his attitude towards this controversial industry.
