

Reader-response Criticism

- Reader-response criticism does not designate any one critical theory.
- It is a focus on the process of reading a literary text that is shared by many of the critical modes, American and European.
- It have come into prominence since the 1960s.
- Reader-response critics turn from the traditional conception that a text embodies an achieved set of meanings, and focus instead on the ongoing mental operations and responses of readers as their eyes follow a text on the page before them.
- Matters that had been considered by critics to be objective features of the literary work itself are dissolved into an evolving process.
- It consist of diverse expectations, and the violations, deferments, satisfactions, and restructurings of expectations, in the flow of a reader's experience.
