Comments Linked to Criteria

Understanding of key ideas:

Section A: You demonstrate a clear grasp of science education research relevant to this topic, commendably aiming to identify and remove misconceptions through active learning, including original activities such as a mock episode of the BBC quiz show QI. As you freely admit, you are not yet able to teach capacitors at A2 level confidently (e.g. describing the time constant  $RC$  as being 'complicated') but you are working towards this goal.

Section B: Reflections on your learning journey are thoughtful and extensive, implicitly but not explicitly drawing on a learning journal kept throughout the course. As well as your own learning, you describe its positive impact within your department.

Use of material:

In both Sections of the assignment, you draw appropriately on relevant literature and critically link it to your own experience in the classroom, presenting a well-constructed discussion which enables you to identify specific improvements. In Section A you are able to be critical of some questions included in your student questionnaire. In Section B you make clear how thinking deeply about both student perceptions and also particular topics has improved your general approach to teaching physics.

Range and comprehension of sources:

Your choice of primary and secondary sources is balanced and comprehensive, demonstrating your research initiative. The use of diagnostic questions, before and after teaching, together with end test and colleague observations together provide useful insights into student learning.

Communication:

Both sections of the assignment are well-structured and use appropriate specialist language. The use of a table in Section A very effectively conveys the information necessary to a proper evaluation of the teaching scheme and implications of your students' difficulties.

Understanding Bible by Design G. Brooke Lester, Christopher M. Jones, Jane S. Webster, 2014 Today's seminary instructors are expected to design and redesign their courses more nimbly than in the past. At the same time, institutional rewards for time invested in course design are fewer than ever. Understanding Bible by Design introduces the reader to Understanding by Design, an approach to course design that is proven, time-efficient, and grounded in the instructor's most closely held convictions about her subject matter's big ideas and essential questions. Lester's synopsis of course design and suggested action is followed by a collaborative dialogue with Jane S. Webster and Christopher M. Jones. Back cover
