    F&S Index United States Annual ,1996   Disrupting Data Discovery Mark Grover,2019 Before any analysis can begin a data scientist needs to discover the right data sources to analyze understand them and determine whether they can trust them Unfortunately data discovery is very inefficient today Countless hours are lost trying to find the right data to use The most common way still remains to ask a coworker Gaining trust in data requires running a bunch of queries max timestamp counts per day count distincts etc that waste time and add unnecessary load on the databases There s no clear way to know how to find folks to answer questions about the table And worst of all many times analysis is redone and models are rebuilt because previous work isn t discoverable Lyft has reduced the time it takes to discover data by 10x by building its own data portal Amundsen Amundsen is built on three key pillars an augmented data graph an intuitive user experience and centralized metadata Amundsen uses a graph database under the hood to store relationships between various data assets tables dashboards protobuf events etc What s unique to Amundsen is that it treats people as a first class data asset in other words there s a graph node for each person in the organization that connects to other nodes like tables and dashboards In addition Amundsen runs PageRank using data from access logs to power search ranking similar to how Google ranks web pages on the internet Finally Amundsen gathers metadata from various different sources Hive Presto Airflow etc and exposes it in one central place The right place to store all this metadata is a work in progress Mark Grover and Tao Feng Lyft offer a demo of Amundsen and lead a deep dive into its architecture covering how it leverages centralized metadata page rank and a comprehensive data graph to achieve its goal They also explore the future roadmap unsolved problems and its collaboration model This session was recorded at the 2019 O Reilly Strata Data Conference in San Francisco
