

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

An Exposition that Supplication is not in Conflict with Contentment

He who supplicates does not relinquish the stage of contentment. Similarly, a repugnance for sin and a hatred of sinners and the occasions of sin, coupled with the zeal to eliminate them by "commanding the good and prohibiting the forbidden," do not stand in opposition to supplication (du'ā'). Some deluded good-for-nothings have erred in this, declaring that sin, iniquity and unbelief come about through God's predestination and so one must be content with them. This is ignorance of true interpretation and obtuseness to the mysteries of divine revelation.

By supplication we worship. Many supplications of God's Messenger (may God bless him and grant him peace) indicate this, as do those of the other prophets (we have transmitted them in the Book of Invocations).¹ Even so, the Messenger of God (may God bless him and grant him peace) stood at the supreme station of contentment. God praised certain servants of His by saying, *They called to Us in longing and in fear.*² As for rejecting sin, as well as repugnance and dissatisfaction with it, this is in fact the way His servants show God reverence. Indeed, God rebukes them when they are content with sin, for He says, *They are pleased with the life of the world and feel tranquil in it.*³ He also says, *They are content that they should be with the useless and their hearts are sealed.*⁴
