

Chapter 20: Community Ecology

Notes:

Chapter 20: Community Ecology: Interaction among different species, groups, and functional groups of species involved

20.1: Introduction

Community Ecology is the scientific study of interactions among the groups of interacting organisms, including both interspecific and intraspecific. How do the species found in groups in the field?

Ecological Community: group of populations of different species living together in a particular area

What are the major interactions between species in a field?

- Energy flow: autotrophs, heterotrophs, detritus species
- Competition: resource limitation, predation, mutualism, commensalism
- Symbiosis: parasitism or mutualism (difficult to distinguish and separated as well as find the things involved in the interaction)

What are the 3 types of interactions?

- Competition (+/-)
- Predation (+/-)
- Symbiosis (+/+)

Competition (+/-)

- Individuals within a species compete with their conspecifics for the limited and resources of the environment
- Intraspecific within a species, there's always niche separation advantage with conspecifics, intraspecific competition
- Interspecific between conspecifics, different species

Ecological Niche

- The organism's ecological role, which may include the organism through the use of matter and energy resources as required by the environment
 - Ecological niche includes the organism's shape, functions, which all describe the niche in nature, the way it fits into its environment as a whole of itself
- Two species cannot occupy the same niche (competitive exclusion principle) can result in a competitive difference or niche displacement
 - Resource partitioning, differentiation, which may reduce resource species overlap or coexistence
 - Ecological niche may be shared and be an identical niche
- Fundamental niche, niche potentially occupied by a species
