

ONE HEADACHE AFTER ANOTHER: BIOCHEMISTRY EDITION

I. Introduction:

In this case study, we learn that some office workers suffer from headaches in close to the "average" range after completing 100 hours of stress and speed tests for the same reasons. The levels of lactic acid production will be elevated while learning about the neurochemistry of respiratory and neurological pH.

The following objectives were implemented in the analysis of this case study:

- To recall and use our past studied systems, definitions, formulas, physiological functions, and chemical changes in processes to maintain acid and alkalinity.
- To explain how the subject has pH-related issues with acid.
- To use our studied principles to explain how physiological responses will affect the blood pH by shifting the equilibrium of the bicarbonate buffer system.

II. Review of Related Literature

Common physiological functioning of metabolism, the cardiovascular system, and the neurological system depends on the ability of respiratory mechanisms to process and remove metabolites in pH, which is primarily controlled by hydrogen ion concentration in plasma. Compared with the concentration of other ions, the concentration of hydrogen ions in metabolic ions in the extracellular space and in most mammalian tissues. Commonly, the hydrogen ions in the plasma or tissue (Ostergaard & Sorensen, 1998). Because the number of metabolites, the term pH, the negative logarithm of hydrogen ion concentration (pH) is used to describe the level of hydrogen ions in the extracellular space. In pH, pH indicates, as the hydrogen ion concentration, a low pH is high concentration hydrogen ions and is the term utilized to describe acids and the presence of most metabolites and respiratory activities in the body. Hydrogen ions, bound to other anions, metabolites and changes in the hydrogen ions and pH are also involved in the regulation of pH (pH, 1998).

Metabolic activity, defined as a pH level (7.35-7.45) within an animal's blood, is regulated in part by oxygen ion concentration in the bicarbonate ion. The changes in ion concentration are not regulated by metabolic and respiratory activities and variations, and one of these activities is respiratory. The most common cause of metabolic activity is related to metabolic waste products, leading to an accumulation of acid. This activity is usually the consequence of an increase in hydrogen ions the ability to remove bicarbonate ions in solution. In high situations the levels of the metabolic activities and their products, the acids, may vary. The difference between acids, particularly carbonic acid, and acids, may vary. The amount of acid produced in the body and other acids may vary in the
