

2. EXAMPLE USES

a) Direct Checks

The most straight forward use of the NRPE add-on is to monitor "local" or "private" resources on a remote Linux/Unix Machine. This includes things like CPU load, memory usage, swap usage, current users, disk usage, process states, etc.

b) Indirect Checks

You can also use the NRPE add-on to indirectly check "public" services and resources of remote servers that might not be reachable directly from the monitoring host. For instance, if the remote host that the NRPE daemon and plugins are installed on can talk to the a remote web server (but the monitoring host cannot), you can configure the NRPE daemon to allow you to monitor the remote web server indirectly. The NRPE daemon is essentially acting as proxy in this case.
