

APUSH Period 7: 1898-1945: Everything You Need to Know

Unit 7 Topic 2: Debates about American Imperialism

Explain the similarities and differences in attitudes about the nation's proper role in the world.

- Imperialism: the expansion of one country's political, economic and military influence over another country
- Purchase of Alaska in 1867: both Russia and Great Britain laid competing claims to this territory, so William Seward (Lincoln, then Johnson's secretary of state) proposed a purchase of the territory for 7.2 million dollars
  - Branded Seward's Folly, because the land was viewed as a polar icebox with no real value until 1898, when gold was discovered there
- Frederick Jason Turner's concern over the closing of the frontier catalyzed further expansion- it wasn't just the West that Americans could take, after all
- Fierce debate concerning imperial expansion between two groups:
  - Imperialists: looked to the gold discovered in Alaska as evidence for the existence of valuable raw materials in other places that America could take; wanted to secure new markets for American-made manufactured and agricultural goods. Used social darwinism to justify expansion
    - Competition with European empires
    - Josiah Strong's book "Our Country: Its Possible Future and Present Crisis" was published in 1885 and argued that the white Anglo-Saxon race was the pinnacle of human evolution, therefore the fittest to survive, and it was the Christian duty of the white race to expand, bringing Christianity and western civilization to the rest of the world
    - Alfred Thayer Mahan published "The Influence of Sea Power on History" in 1890, arguing that any country that was strong on the world stage got that way because they had a robust navy. This was the only way to secure the robust markets industrialists wanted
    - Congress was persuaded to construct a new steel fleet of ships to push forward imperial expansion; a great race began to secure Pacific and Caribbean territories that could facilitate American naval dominance
  - Anti-imperialists: believed in the principle of self-determination for all nations, argued that America had a long history of isolationism dating back to Washington's Farewell Address, and that enmeshing ourselves in territories across the globe will draw us into unnecessary wars and economic disputes
    - Self determination: the idea that a nation should be able to decide for itself who ruled it and what laws should be passed
