Abstract - Digital transformation has reached out to every aspect of human lives, including personal and institutional provided healthcare. In order to inspect changes occurring in the healthcare domain due to digital transformation, a literature review is conducted. A systematic literature search in the Clarivate Analytics' Web of Science database was carried out, along with the text mining in order to analyze the papers. The following attributes are considered for the classification and analysis of the papers: time component; methodological approach; research areas; and; topic identification. Results revealed that the digital transformation of healthcare has just recently begun to induce more interest in the research community. Furthermore, a mixture of scholars' profiles investigates the topic, including engineering and information scientists, as well as medical and healthcare service researchers. Additionally, by using text mining, we have identified four discourses of topics that are addressed in the literature when considering the digital transformation of healthcare. The interdisciplinary nature of the topic calls for the inclusion of diverse experts from the medical, informatics and public administration areas in order to advise proper government actions and stimulate the research field.

Keywords - digital transformation; digitization; healthcare; literature review; text mining

I. INTRODUCTION

The proliferation of numerous digital technologies such as the Internet of Things (IoT), RFID, artificial intelligence and robotics, brings new business possibilities and revenue streams in numerous sectors if implemented properly and strategically. Digital transformation is a process of change occurring due to the application of these digital technologies [1]. It can be observed at the organizational or the industry level. From the organizational or company point of view, the emphasis is made on how to employ "digital and other technologies along with organizational practices to create a digital culture" [1, p. 36]. When observing the digital transformation trend on the industry level, the appearance of disruptive business models that are changing the established ways of work and government regulations are stressed [2]. The healthcare sector is not an exception in this trend.

Healthcare Information Technology (HIT) is usually associated with electronic health records (EHR). Integration of patients' EHR alongside the entire healthcare system stems from the general practice doctors to hospital treatments and access to pharmaceuticals. This integration is considered to be essential to a better and cost-efficient healthcare system [2]. However, some reports suggest that traditional EHR-based IT systems are barriers to the inclusion of new digital technologies and patients data they provide into the HIT [3]. According to some authors [4], [5], the healthcare system is shifting from the institutional-provided care to the more personal and human-centric approach due to digital technologies. In order to shed some light on this phenomenon, a systematic literature review of the digital transformation of healthcare is conducted.

Hence, the objective of this paper is to investigate the state and progress of research on digital transformation in healthcare. In order to do so, a systematic literature search has been carried out and identified relevant papers have been analyzed according to the following attributes: time component (Year); types of papers that deal with the topic (Methodological Approach); research areas that cover the topic (Research Area); and; topics' identification and categorization (Clusters of Topics).

The remainder of this paper is organized as follows. After the introduction, a methodology section explains three steps that have been undertaken in order to address the research objective of this paper. The methodology section is followed by the presentation of literature review results. Next, a text mining analysis reveals the digital transformation in healthcare topics' landscape. In the end, we conclude the paper with a short summary and recommendations for future research directions.

II. METHODOLOGY

The adopted methodological approach for this paper has incorporated three steps. The first step has concerned the identification of relevant literature. After the literature collection, the analysis step has consisted of two parts. The first part of the analysis has been focused on the investigation of the papers according to the three attributes: time component; methodological approach, and; research areas. In the last step, we have employed a text mining. With the aid of the text mining, we have discovered distinct discourses of topics investigated under the umbrella of digital transformation in healthcare. Identification of topic discourses, along with the other observed parameters, has enabled us to shape the recommendations for the future research agenda in the field.
