Entry Number: Henrietta Lacks and HeLa Cells
Text Henrietta Lacks was a poor, uneducated African American woman who died of cervical cancer in 1951. Her cells, which were taken from her tumor, became the first immortal human cell line, known as HeLa cells. These cells have been used in countless scientific experiments, including the development of the polio vaccine, the discovery of the structure of DNA, and the development of the AIDS virus. The book explores the ethical implications of using Henrietta's cells without her consent, and the impact of her discovery on the lives of African Americans.	Summary/Response: Henrietta Lacks' cells have revolutionized the way we think about cancer. I find it very remarkable that these cells have lived for over 50 years and are still being used in research. The book shows that the scientific community often ignores the rights of the people whose cells are used in research. It is a sad story that highlights the need for more ethical oversight in scientific research.
Text The book is a powerful story of a woman whose cells have become the most important tool in modern biology. It is a story of a woman who was treated as a mere source of cells, and whose life was sacrificed for the sake of science. The book is a powerful reminder of the importance of ethical oversight in scientific research, and the need to protect the rights of the people whose cells are used in research.	Summary/Response: The book is a powerful story of a woman whose cells have become the most important tool in modern biology.
