Anthem of Misogyny Ibtissam Bouachrine, 2022-10-03 Anthem of Misogyny The War on Women in North Africa and the Middle East argues that misogyny which operates through an interconnected network of ideologies institutions beliefs aesthetics and cultural trends is too complex and too deep rooted to eradicate with superficial changes Like a national anthem misogyny in North Africa and the Middle East has acquired a sacred status It is accepted uncritically and woven effortlessly into daily practices creating a community of men of different ages educational levels and socioeconomic backgrounds who are united in their sense of entitlement to evaluate scrutinize deter question and expose women For women it is as if they are in a state of perpetual war forever on the verge of being accused of deviating from the norms and being punished These norms however are neither clear nor predictable This study of misogyny is written against a dominant orthodoxy in Western feminism Critics are accused of gendered orientalism savior complexes and even Islamophobia if they dare to bring up misogyny and gender based violence in North Africa and the Middle East in contexts other than calling it a Western created issue Rather than exaggerate Western agency this book is invested in making Muslim agency visible There are narratives of violence and injustice that produce discomfort anger and even despair These stories deserve to be told and those behind the injustices are entitled to an unfiltered portrayal because the non West too is deserving of unapologetic feminist critique

There is currently a proliferation of business focused leadership development programs in Saudi Arabia These programs represent a reaction to the shortage of qualified leaders who can drive and sustain both recent and future advances introduced by Saudi Vision 2030 the national transformation program that is introducing social and economic reforms Importantly business leadership development has not been studied in this context of contemporary Saudi Arabia This study examined the state of Saudi leadership development programs by employing an explanatory sequential case study design that focused on a particular leadership development program Through the use of surveys and participant interviews results revealed that most participants benefitted from the program and noticed growth in their leadership skills Results also suggested that participants found small group activities and strategic management to be the most effective program features Regression analysis results revealed significant positive correlations between participants growth in their leadership skills and the relevance of program content to their background and work as well as their engagement in program activities while a significant negative correlation was found between participants growth in leadership and their status as a parent While qualitative interview findings confirmed the first two findings they contradicted the parental finding suggesting that more research is needed in this area Interviews also pointed to some of the most valuable components of the program including the overall quality of training content and delivery interactivity and practicality of the program and participants ability to learn soft skills and change their perspectives Some areas of improvement were also discovered including enrollment criteria and the quality and comprehensiveness of program material such as readings The findings and recommendations from this study could benefit various stakeholders For instance organizations interested in these programs need to select people who are interested in learning and growing their skills Organizations also need to consider supplementary initiatives within the workplace to expand leadership development from individual to collective levels For trainers practicality and interactivity are key features for successful programs Finally many soft skills taught in these programs could be included into school curriculum to ensure future workers are better prepared Saudi Aramco and Its People Thomas A. Transformational Leadership Sarah E. Jolley,2015 While leadership development programs have a variety of intended outcomes personal transformation is a common outcome across most of these programs The purpose of this phenomenological study was to explore the process of transformation through a leadership development experience and describe what transformation looks like for individuals who experience it and identify what elements of the leadership development experience contribute to that transformation In depth interviews with ten individuals revealed nine key themes in the transformation process multiple experiences quality of the experience influence of curriculum and methodology application of learning experience of emotion challenge and support from others communication with others recognition of self and others and transformation of self and purpose This qualitative study also sought to examine how a leadership development experience can contribute to an individual s motivation and ability to exercise leadership that is transformational and for the common good These findings suggest that for a leadership development experience to do that the experience should focus on purpose leadership for a purpose that is bigger than any individual s or group s self interest progress making progress on issues as opposed to solving or fixing them which may be nearly impossible for some intractable community issues people individuals need others to provide sufficient challenge and adequate support both during and following their leadership development experience if transformation is to occur and practice individuals need opportunities to practice applying what they learn in a safe environment and the leadership development classroom can serve as an appropriate environment in which that practice can take place Strategic Leadership Development Abel Amy
