

Case Analysis

Example 1. The main issue in this case is whether the State of Florida violated fourteenth amendment right by depriving them of love, due to their height from a law that was passed that prohibited two short people from marrying.

This is a due process case. Procedural Due Process is in the 14th Amendment - Section 1. "...nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law..." The definition of liberty and property: "...a vast scope of personal rights. It also infers the absence of arbitrary and unreasonable government restraints and anything that is subject to ownership such as legal entitlement, public education and other intangibles. "The due process guarantee protects people from unfairness in the operation of both substantive and procedural law. Procedural law prescribes the method used to enforce legal rights. It provides the machinery by which individuals can enforce their rights or obtain redress for the invasion of such rights." Courts generally try to balance accuracy against its cost on a case-by-case basis. This is done since procedural due process rights cost the government time and money.

An example for a case examined such as this would be the U.S. (United States). Supreme Court in 1967, titled Loving V. Virginia. Richard Loving, a white male, and his wife Mildred, a black female, sued challenging Virginia's antimiscegenation laws. These statues made it illegal for white people to marry Black people.

Since the State of Florida had... established a law prohibiting two very short people from marrying. One could argue that depriving a couple of love based on their height is unconstitutional. Children should not be factored in the decision of a couple being able to marry based upon height. The State of Florida is infringing upon the couple's fourteenth amendment depriving them of life and liberty. The court should rule in favor of Brian Short.

Example 2. The main issue in the case is whether Micheal has enough evidence to prove that he did not and was not cheating on the exam. The University was excessive with the ruling of dismissing him from the University with no tuition refunds and deleting his transcript.

This is a due process case. Procedural Due Process is in the 14th Amendment - Section 1. "...nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law..." The definition of liberty and property: "...a vast scope of personal rights. It also infers the absence of arbitrary and unreasonable government restraints and anything that is subject to ownership such as legal entitlement, public education and other intangibles. "The due process guarantee protects people from unfairness in the operation of both substantive and procedural law. Procedural law prescribes the method used to enforce legal rights. It provides the machinery by which individuals can enforce their rights or obtain redress for the invasion of such rights." Courts generally try to balance accuracy against its cost on a case-by-case basis. This is done since procedural due process rights cost the government time and money.
