Why do leaves change colour?

It is a well known and celebrated phenomenon to see leaves change from green to shades of red, orange, yellow and brown in the autumn time.

This amazing change is the result of a chemical called chlorophyll, or in fact, the lack of it! Chlorophyll is a green pigment that can be found in most plants, as they use it to photosynthesise.

In autumn, leave the tree that leaves go through a process which means they actually stop their photosynthesising! Therefore, as the plants stop doing their photosynthesis process, the reserves other chemicals in the leaves that were hidden by the dominant green of the chlorophyll!

These other chemicals have a variety of different colours, mainly yellows, red and oranges. The presence of each chemical varies depending on plant species, therefore resulting in a variety of different shades of leaves.
