A Brief Guide to Referencing

This referencing guide will provide a quick and clear overview of the UWS Harvard referencing style, along with examples of how to reference some of the most commonly used sources. There is further information on UWS Harvard style available in the "UWS Referencing Guide" under the library tab on Moodle.

What is Referencing?

It is expected that the work you produce at university will be informed by the thoughts and ideas of others. Referencing is simply the way to signal to your reader that you have included someone else's words or ideas in your own work. A reference is needed whether you are paraphrasing, summarising, quoting directly or using any information that is not your own.

Why Reference?

References are good things, which enhance the quality of your academic work! A relevant reference:

- Shows your reader that you have undertaken research into the topic.
- Demonstrates the use of supporting evidence within your work.
- Helps your reader to find the original source if they wish.
- Helps to avoid plagiarism.

What is plagiarism?

Plagiarism, whether intentional or unintentional, occurs when you claim someone else's words or ideas as your own. The key thing to remember is that if you correctly use references to acknowledge the thoughts or words of other people within your own work, you should not have to worry about plagiarism.
