On the Origins of Human Emotions Jonathan Turner,2000-06-01 Language and culture are often seen as unique characteristics of human beings In this book the author argues that our ability to use a wide array of emotions evolved long before spoken language and in fact constituted a preadaptation for the speech and culture that developed among later hominids Long before humans could speak with words they communicated through body language their emotional dispositions and it is the neurological wiring of the brain for these emotional languages that represented the key evolutionary breakthrough for our species How did natural selection work on the basic ape anatomy and neuroanatomy to create the hominid line The author suggests that what distinguished our ancestors from other apes was the development of an increased capacity for sociality and organization crucial for survival on the African savanna All apes display a propensity for weak ties individualism mobility and autonomy that was and is today useful in arboreal and woodland habitats but served them poorly when our ancestors began to move onto the African plain during the late Miocene The challenge for natural selection was to enhance traits in the species that would foster the social ties necessary for survival in the new environment The author suggests that the result was a development of certain areas of the primate brain that encouraged strong emotional ties allowing our ancestors to build higher levels of social solidarity Our basic neurological wiring continues to reflect this adaptive development From a sociological perspective that is informed by evolutionary biology primatology and neurology the book examines the current neurological bases of our emotional repertoire and their implications for our social actions

The Evolution of Emotion Paul F. Kisak,2016-04-29 The study of the evolution of emotions dates back to the 19th century and has come to be known as sensusology Evolution and natural selection has been applied to the study of human communication mainly by Charles Darwin in his 1872 work The Expression of the Emotions in Man and Animals Darwin researched the expression of emotions in an effort to support his theory of evolution He proposed that much like other traits found in animals emotions also evolved and were adapted over time His work looked at not only facial expressions in animals and specifically humans but attempted to point out parallels between behaviors in humans and other animals According to modern evolutionary theory different emotions evolved at different times Primal emotions such as fear are associated with ancient parts of the brain and presumably evolved among our premammal ancestors Filial emotions such as a human mother s love for her offspring seem to have evolved among early mammals Social emotions such as guilt and pride evolved among social primates Sometimes a more recently evolved part of the brain moderates an older part of the brain such as when the cortex moderates the amygdala s fear response Evolutionary psychologists consider human emotions to be best adapted to the life our ancestors led in nomadic foraging bands
