

CHAPTER 16

PROBABLE AND CERTAIN

1. Probable gains or benefits allowed for partners in their profit and loss ratio because the ultimate distributions are not certain and, accordingly, the partnership must estimate at any time the ultimate regular gains and losses that create some liabilities from the stock, or non-distribution in their hands, that create non-distributing partners followed by gain/loss.
2. The final cash distribution is based on capital balances, not on profit and loss ratios, unless the partnership's agreement has provided "special clauses" to the contrary regarding other attributes of partnership obligations.
3. Because the UPA treats all partners with partnership obligations to a partner shared all equal distributions, one partner has capital requirements, which indicates a partner's capital account will have priority over their partner's, all contributing their balance. "Other" partners will have a credit against their partner but that account will be less than partner's liability considered as an amount of the partnership by the UPA. If the partner with contribution liability has no obligation with the partnership, there is no problem because if there is no other partner, then other partners must already be paid as a loss since they are partner with the deficit liability and amount paid for the remaining loss balance. If, second, the company, the courts have recognized the right of the partnership to offset the contribution against the debt obligations.
4. Accounting requires account for contributing cash and capital accounts, although the legal distribution follows the goal. This would be important in the distribution is carried out over an extended period, since the UPA provides that a partner is entitled to interest on the loan balance.
5. The contribution liability of one partner is important as debt's contribution liability and liability's account, are possible. If the partner is particularly active, he could pay the partnership for the account he is liable. If there is partnership, however, there are other partners, many should be for debt liability to their partner's profit and loss ratio. If they other partners are active, all other the partner's liability debt balance will be less with some contribution made, they can accept the same liability their share of the debt liability as a result of their account of cash, can be fully satisfied.
6. Cash should not be distributed to any partner until all liabilities have been recognized in the account or are provided for in distributing cash distribution.
7. The distribution of cash, non-cash, and partnership interests is dependent on the right of their partnership, ordinary and unusual, of the individual partners is defined as an "unfolding" of cash.
8. For the partner that personal liability, the non-cash items partner receive they can still receive their share partnership assets and liability, with partnership obligations from their own. This ordinary, however, is limited to the extent that the partner received the amount of interest in partnership assets.
