Nutrition as a Pharmacological Approach to Metabolic Disorders and Ageing Chiara Ruocco, Amit Kumar Singh, Enzo Nisoli, Maurizio Ragni, Agnese Segala, Letizia Spataro, Luca Canciani, 2026-02-03 The field of nutrition pharmacology is emerging as a promising area of research focusing on the role of food as a modulator of cellular signaling and its impact on health Recent studies have highlighted the potential of fatty acids amino acids and vitamins to influence several cellular pathways that regulate complex biochemical processes including gene expression stress adaptation and cellular senescence These findings suggest that food can act as a true pharmaceutical tool capable of reducing age related disorders like cardiovascular diseases immune dysfunctions and cancer risks as well as metabolic diseases such as obesity diabetes and metabolic syndrome particularly in genetically predisposed individuals Despite these advancements the precise cellular mechanisms through which nutritional components and supplements exert their pharmacological effects remain poorly understood Current research is limited by the complexity of the interactions between dietary elements and the body's biochemical networks as well as the challenges in using traditional experimental models to study these effects There is a pressing need for innovative approaches to unravel these intricate networks and to better understand the pharmacological potential of nutrition This research topic aims to elucidate the methodological challenges and recent advances in understanding how diet manipulation and dietary supplementation influence aging age related and metabolic disorders within a pharmacological framework The objective is to explore the complex interplay between dietary metabolites biochemical intermediates and endogenous processes including those mediated by the intestinal microbiota By addressing these complexities the research topic aims to identify the molecular and cellular events that are affected by nutrients and supplements and to develop new methodologies for studying these interactions To gather further insights into the pharmacological potential of nutrition we welcome articles addressing but not limited to the following themes The role of specific nutrients and dietary supplements in modulating cellular signaling pathways Advances in omics and mass spectrometry analysis for studying nutritional impacts on health The influence of diet on the intestinal microbiota and its implications for metabolic health Methodological innovations for disentangling complex biochemical networks affected by diet Comparative studies on the effects of different dietary compositions on health span and metabolism Challenges and limitations of current experimental models in nutrition pharmacology research All the manuscripts submitted to the collection will need to fully comply with the Four Pillars of Best Practice in Ethnopharmacology you can freely download the full version here Please self assess your MS using the ConPhyMP tool and follow the standards established in the ConPhyMP statement Front Pharmacol 13 953205 Please note the traditional context including the primary background and modern uses with supporting references must be included in the manuscript introduction Purely in silico approaches using complex mixtures extracts are generally not considered Forest Landscape Restoration \(FLR\) and Carbon Storage Dynamics

Yashwant Singh Rawat, Chandra Prakash Kala, Anteneh Tesfaye Tekleyohannes, 2026-03-10

Forest ecosystems occupy a substantial part of the Earth's land surface. Forests are crucial to global carbon sinks, capturing and storing terrestrial carbon and accounting for approximately 25% of the world's atmospheric carbon. Forests are critical in offering many ecosystem services, notably carbon sequestration, habitat conservation, and promoting ecological sustainability. Nearly 45% of the organic carbon present in biomass and soil is stored in forests. Carbon storage in forests is critically important from ecological and environmental perspectives. Despite their importance, terrestrial forests face significant threats from human activities like agricultural development, land use, and land cover change (LULC) over exploitation and infrastructure expansion, leading to changes in forests and carbon storage dynamics and contributing to approximately 25-30% of all greenhouse gas emissions. These activities have adversely affected the forests' carbon storage capacity and ecological functionality. Hence, this research topic is timely and can address several emerging gaps and priorities crucial for climate change mitigation, biodiversity conservation, sustainable land use, and enhancing human well-being.

Forest landscape restoration and carbon storage dynamics are connected to many climate change mitigation strategies and ecosystem restoration programs. Increasing forest carbon sequestration requires diverse sustainable forest management practices, e.g., enrichment planting, regeneration, silviculture, management, agroforestry systems, afforestation, reforestation, and selective logging assessments. Forests sequester carbon through their foliage and store it in tree trunks, branches, and roots, as well as within soil pools and forest litter. We must preserve our forests to extend climate change mitigation and combat deforestation through ecosystem-based approaches to maximize carbon stock. Hence, forest landscape restoration and management under the UN Decade on Ecosystem Restoration is critical for climate change mitigation and biodiversity conservation. The prototype development, adoption of best practices, participation, selection of the species, and ecosystem in forest landscape restoration and carbon storage dynamics are the major gaps to be addressed. Additionally, there is a limited understanding of how climate change affects forest landscape restoration, carbon storage potential, and forest resilience in restored landscapes. Therefore, this research topic aims to integrate diverse considerations: socio-cultural factors, silviculture, scientific advancements in carbon monitoring, ecological functionality, and climate change impacts into the implementation of sustainable forest management. By focusing on forest landscape restoration, the research seeks to assess and enhance the carbon sequestration capabilities of forests and refine management practices to support broader climate change mitigation and biodiversity preservation efforts. Thus, there is a need to quantify carbon sequestration rates across various restoration methods. To further advance our understanding in this area, we encourage submissions that delve into a range of pertinent themes within forest landscape restoration: Assessing forest landscape restoration and carbon storage dynamics; Estimating the carbon sequestration potential of the forest ecosystems and the species; Impact of deforestation on carbon storage and devising management strategies; Assessing climate change effects on ecological functionality; Investigating emerging trends and technologies.
