

MUSLIM FAMILY LAWS:

What Makes Reform Possible?

As human affairs change and evolve, laws and social norms that shape family relations also need to be adjusted and refined to reflect these changes. Most contemporary Muslim family laws are based on a centuries-old juristic (fiqh) framework that no longer responds to contemporary Muslim realities. Law reform is one method for addressing social and economic changes and making our legal systems compatible with the actual needs of individuals and families today.

Reform is often resisted on the grounds that Muslim family laws are divine and thus not open to change. Yet in reality change and reform have been inherent in Muslim legal tradition. Islamic legal theory is rich with concepts and tools that have been continually used in the past and that can pave the way for family laws that are more in line with contemporary Muslim realities, as well as with modern notions of justice which, in the course of the twentieth century, have come to include gender equality.

Usul al-fiqh (principles of jurisprudence) is the ethico-legal methodology developed during the formative period of Islamic thought (from the death of the Prophet in 632 to 950 CE) for extracting laws from Islam's sacred sources.

Here are brief explanations of some key concepts in this methodology and how they can be used as tools for reform.

Shari'ah versus Fiqh

Shari'ah is the totality of religious values that God revealed to the Prophet Muhammad (pbuh) to guide human beings to truth and justice. Fiqh is the process of humans endeavouring to discern the terms of Shari'ah from the sacred sources of Islam – the Qur'an and the Sunnah (the sayings and practice of the Prophet) – and to extract legal rulings (ahkam) from these sources.

Shari'ah is the sum total of religious values and principles that can guide Muslims' lives. It is divine and eternal. In contrast, fiqh is the process by which humans attempt to derive concrete legal rulings from Shari'ah. Like any other system of jurisprudence, fiqh is man-made, contingent, temporal, and thus subject to change.
