Don't Try

Charles Bukowski was an alcoholic, a womanizer, a heroin addict, a poet, a philosopher, a drinker, and so on and so on. I guess he's probably the last person on earth you would ever look to for life advice or expect to be a very good role model.

Which is why he's the perfect person to read.

Bukowski wanted to be a writer. But for decades his work was rejected by almost every magazine, newspaper, journal, agent, and publisher he submitted to. In the end, he finally got published. He kept trying, he kept submitting, and as the stacks of rejection slips piled up, the weight of his failure probably kept him from an alcohol-fueled depression that would follow the lead of the 99.

Bukowski had to stay job as a letter writer at a post office to get paid and money and spend most of it on booze. He quit his job, the rest of the manuscript. At night, he would drink alone and sometimes himself was party on the best of all operations. When he'd wake up on the floor, having passed out the night before.

Many years went by like this, most of it a combination like of alcohol, drugs, gambling, and prostitution. Then, when Bukowski was fifty, after a lifetime of failure and self-hatred, an editor at a small independent publishing house took a strange interest in him. The editor couldn't offer Bukowski much money or much promise of sales, but he had a world otherwise like the drunk alone, so he decided to take a chance on him. It was the first year that Bukowski had ever gotten paid, he walked, probably the only one for which ever got. Bukowski wrote back to the editor: "I have one of two choices: stay in the post office and continue . . . or stay out here and live as writer and man. I have decided to write."

Years ago, the contract, Bukowski wrote his first novel in three weeks. It was called *Women and Other Stories of the Subtle Art of Not Giving a F*ck*.
