Breathing

Breathing properly during exercise is essential for maximizing performance and preventing fatigue, injury & general poor health.

Deep breathing. Slowly taking in the air through your nose, expanding your chest, and exhaling through your mouth. Repeating this respiratory cycle throughout your workout.

It helps with focus, the air intake, and your energy. It also decreases your heart rate and your breathing rate. This helps with your metabolism and helps you breathe easier.

With consistent practice, you can improve your breathing and overall health.
