Festivals Stained with Blood

1. Have you ever heard of bull fighting in Spain? Did you know that it is part of a religious festival? This brings up the question why some religions can involve fighting and the cruel killing of animals.

2. The Festival of San Fermin takes place in Pamplona in Spain. It celebrates the life of St. Fermin, the first Catholic bishop of the city. Every year, the festival lasts for over a week from 6th to 14th July. A lot of eating and drinking takes place during the week. People sing, dance and watch parades. It is the most well-known Spanish festival with over one million overseas visitors celebrating it each year.

3.  The festival's most famous event is the running of the bulls. At 8:00 each morning throughout the week, hundreds of people run in front of six bulls down the narrow streets in the old town of Pamplona. The run is over in just three minutes. It ends with the bull locked up in the bull ring. There, the bull is held until the bull fighter arrives in the afternoon. He and his assistant then make it angry with a red cape. The bull smashes into the bull fighter who stabs it with knives. The bull gets mad and plunges into him again and again. It finally gets killed with multiple knife stabs.

4. Every year, more than 200 people running with the bulls are injured. Carried away by a sense of excitement, both the tourists and locals do not think of the danger of arousing the bulls. Much less do they bother about the horrible sufferings of the dying bulls.

5.  An even bloodier festival takes place in Kathmandu, Nepal, which is near India. Over 80 percent of the people in Nepal are Hindus. Every five years during the Gadhimai Festival, they pray for the blessings of Gadhimai, their Goddess of Power.
