

Chapter 20

Multilane Highways

20.1 Description

Increasing traffic flow has caused engineers to find ways to increase the capacity of limited infrastructure by adding an additional level of transportation facilities to the system. One such development of that nature is the multilane highway (with two or more lanes in each direction) or multilane divided highway (with two or more lanes in each direction separated by a median or barrier). An important characteristic of the multilane and LHO systems is that they provide "the give and take" of the system.

20.2 Multilane Highways

A highway is a public road especially designed and constructed for or used primarily for the movement of motor vehicles from one place to another in the same or opposite directions, with or without tolls, and that such basic facilities (including the flow of traffic) independent of other than the use of such facilities. Multilane highways refer to a roadway of multiple lanes in each direction, separated by a median or barrier, with or without tolls. Multilane highways that include a median or barrier are typically classified as controlled access or dual edge.

20.2.1 Highway Classifications

Although there are various methods of classification of highways, the most common one is based on the number of lanes. The following table is provided as:

- Four-lane highway
- Four-lane divided highway
- Six-lane divided highway
