THE LUNGA CONTROVERSY

Lunga is a privately built, planned city near Thane, located near the Rajiv Gandhi Express. It is a project of the Lungha Construction Company and is often described as the first 100% totally green development in India. The plan for the city, which was to have an area of 200 sq km, was a green-field town to be built. It will contain a university, a sports facility, and other parks (read 'Green Lunga: The Hill City' on the website <http://www.lunga.com/rajivghandeeexpress/>). There is a very intensive programme of plantation, water and electricity supply, and the idea of the development of being the largest urban infrastructure project in India. It is a significant economic benefit to the region. It is an architectural design that is a synthesis of green architecture, embracing the sustainability of the site and over 10% of the area that is to be developed through natural landscaping, reforestation and green growth.¹

Lunga City has been planned and designed by the internationally renowned design consultant HOK, US, and has received awards such as the 2004 award for the Indian Green Building Award. Lungha Corporation also has taken up various corporate social responsibility (CSR) projects for the people in the region, especially in the areas of health, education, employment, housing, and environment. In the CSR initiative, value for the environment, some of the major projects were in the form of solid waste management, bio-diversity, and nature tourism.²

However, the project has attracted controversy from the day it began, raising from issues of environmental damage to government of land by legal means and showing back through court orders.

In 2003, India Ministry of Environment registered the company to start the construction of a road in the environmental zone. The Ministry of Environment and Forests issued orders based on the report submitted by the company that the road is not a public utility and that the road is not a public utility. The company has been ordered to stop the road. The company has been ordered to stop the road. The company has been ordered to stop the road. The company has been ordered to stop the road.

Although the road is not a public utility, the company has been ordered to stop the road. The company has been ordered to stop the road. The company has been ordered to stop the road. The company has been ordered to stop the road.

Lunga's position was not good in the court. It is a situation created by the company. It should be the responsibility of the company and not a public utility. It is a situation created by the company. It should be the responsibility of the company and not a public utility.
