Properties of Matter

Introduction

Are you able to distinguish, based on its properties, the object

- Which one is solid, liquid, and gaseous (physical properties)?
- Which one is homogeneous and which one is heterogeneous (chemical properties)?

What Are Physical Properties?

Start with the bottle on the right before you start to do this experiment because it has certain properties.

If physical properties of substances are observed without changing the identity of the substance, observed the properties of an object without its identity. For example, you can identify an object using its color, shape, size, or weight. In general, the properties of an object are determined by the properties of the materials the object is made of.

Many of the physical properties of materials that make up objects can be measured. These properties include density, hardness, magnetism, and the ability to conduct heat and electricity.

Some physical properties depend on how much of a material you have. In other words, a large amount of a material may have different properties than a smaller amount of the material. Other physical properties do not depend on how much of the material you have. They show that no matter how large or small a sample of material is, the particular property is always the same.

Learning Objectives

Identify the physical and chemical properties of substances and distinguish between physical and chemical changes.
