1. Introduction

Imagine you are a shopkeeper selling apples. You have a certain number of apples in your shop. This is your supply. If you have a lot of apples, your supply is high. If you have a few apples, your supply is low. Now imagine you are a customer who wants to buy apples. This is your demand. If you want to buy a lot of apples, your demand is high. If you want to buy a few apples, your demand is low. The price of apples is determined by the balance between supply and demand. If the supply is high and the demand is low, the price will be low. If the supply is low and the demand is high, the price will be high.

2. The Law of Demand

The law of demand states that as the price of a good falls, the quantity demanded increases. This is shown in the demand curve, which is a downward-sloping line. The higher the price, the lower the quantity demanded. The lower the price, the higher the quantity demanded. This is because as the price falls, more people are willing to buy the good. The law of demand is a fundamental principle of economics. It explains why the price of a good falls when there is a surplus and why the price of a good rises when there is a shortage. The law of demand is also used to explain the behavior of consumers in a market.
